R. W. Miller should give good sureties in a bond of not less than $30,000—present bond being deemed too small, and sureties not satisfactory. It seems to have been the practice heretofore to accept the same sureties on a multiplicity of bonds. For instance, a man being worth say $10,000 gives one bond for that amount, and their repeats the process indefinitely. This we believe to be an unwise habit, and one that we think should be at once abolished. STEAMERS ANDY BAUM, CONS MILLAR. JAMES W. GAFF, VINT SHINKLE, JAS D.
